

To whom it may concern:

I just wanted to comment that Air 1 is the only radio station I listen to in New Albany (Indiana – though I think it may be officially broadcast from Louisville, KY?). On their website it mentioned some possible changes regarding Low Power FM that would negatively affect their broadcasting capabilities. I'm not knowledgeable at all about how radio broadcasting works, but I do know that Air 1 is a valuable asset to our local radio and would be a loss to our community if it was forced off the air for any reason (though I don't understand the technical aspects of why this might occur).

The media has all sorts of images (sounds, in this case) that negatively affect one's mood and personality through slogans, songs, and commentaries suggesting we must be more beautiful, more intelligent, and more financially smooth than we are. Air 1 gives me and others in the Louisville area a safe "place" where we know we can relax and not be concerned with the hasslings and stressful paces of the other stations.

Thanks for your time,

Emily Sorg
